Dear Zoo Friends,

It's hard to believe, but this year marks the 30th anniversary of the Phoenix Zoo's holiday tradition of ZooLights. Thirty years is enough time that we're now seeing grandparents bringing their grandchildren to visit ZooLights like they did with their own young families. Family traditions, like ZooLights, are priceless and especially valuable in today's world. Last year, when COVID-19 had many people concerned about gathering for holiday traditions, ZooLights provided many people with a much-needed and safe way to enjoy the holidays with their families (especially the drive-thru option). We are proud of this incredible event and work hard each year to make ZooLights better than ever. This year we are featuring a new set of the very popular lanterns and we'll offer a Cruise ZooLights experience again for those who wish to view it from their cars. Because of the ongoing construction for our exciting new Africa Trail, the route will be a bit different this year; however, we will once again feature a Music-in-Motion display on the main lake. We have more lights this year and new lighted animal armatures, but we're also committed to making our displays more sustainable and have switched to 100% LED bulbs throughout ZooLights.

Speaking of anniversaries, I can't write to you all without acknowledging this is also the 60th anniversary of the Phoenix Zoo Auxiliary. Founded by Nancy Maytag Love to provide “a little fundraising and being helpful wherever we’re needed,” this dedicated group continues today as the Phoenix Zoo’s strongest support organization. The pandemic has kept these very dedicated volunteers away for nearly two years, but we're excited to welcome them back in their signature zebra-striped attire. Just before COVID-19 hit, the Auxiliary had begun a significant fundraiser selling pet paw prints for the Etched in Glass Donor Wall to be displayed at our front entrance, much like their very successful Handprints in Glass Donor Wall from a few years ago. Please consider participating in this beautiful fundraiser and help the Phoenix Zoo Auxiliary continue their long tradition of supporting the Zoo.

I hope to see you all at ZooLights!

Sincerely,

Norberto (Bert) J. Castro
President / CEO

THREE DECADES OF ZOOLIGHTS

Reasons We Love the Valley’s Most Cherished Holiday Tradition

What humbly began in 1992 with just a few hundred thousand twinkles has transformed into millions of lights, a three-story holiday tree, two Music-In-Motion shows and nearly 1,000 hand-crafted sculptures.

Now 30 years later, ZooLights at the Phoenix Zoo has become a holiday institution in the Valley of the Sun.

To celebrate, we narrowed down 30 of the most popular reasons ZooLights is such a special event to so many people.

1. Big Blue and the 35,000 LED lights that make it shine.

2. Kettle corn

3. The holiday music

4. Taking a photo in front of the three-story Christmas tree.

5. Seeing couples get engaged... it happens more than you may think!

6. Taking a quick break to watch an Animal Presentation.
Finding your favorite animal in ZooLights form!

Seeing the lights glimmer and sparkle off the concrete after a desert rain.

Listening to holiday revelers as you make your way inside the Zoo.

Snapping the perfect selfie inside the light tunnel.

Walking on the trail by the zebras and seeing the breathtaking, illuminated trees.

Looking on top of the gibbon island shade cloth and seeing Enik and China snuggling, looking at lights and people watching.

Anticipating the new designs and sculptures every season.

Sitting on the couches at Lemur Lane and Podd Ramada at dusk as the beautiful Arizona sun sets.

Coming together with friends and family that you may not have seen in a while.

Watching the Music-In-Motion shows on the main lake.
19. Seeing the amazing community performers (carolers, choirs, bell ringers, etc.) every year.

20. The smiles. Every single one of 'em.

21. Riding the Endangered Species Carousel at night.

22. If you’re lucky, you can hear African lion Boboo’s territorial roar amongst the holiday music.

23. There’s something special and unique to Arizona about seeing cacti with lights!

24. Bundling up for the cool weather.

25. How it lights up nighttime in the Valley of the Sun.

26. The excitement as you walk along the bridge to get in.

27. Seeing the three-story tree lit for the first time each year!

28. Cruise ZooLights!

29. Hot chocolate!

30. Exclusive Member Preview Nights (This year they are on November 22 & 23!)

As we wind down the busiest time of year for our native species conservation and science projects at the Zoo, we are celebrating a record number of endangered black-footed ferret kits born, multiple releases of Zoo-raised animals to the wild, funding support for exciting projects and research results that may spark a new batch of questions to explore. The Phoenix Zoo is a leader in regional and international wildlife conservation thanks to generous support from our members, donors and other guests, and to the hard work of all of our staff.

All of this work is driven by curiosity about and connection to nature. That fascination, that passion for caring for wildlife is central to our mission, and while it is essential to our successes at the Johnson Conservation Center, it’s also the heart of our work in the Zoo’s Education Department.

The World Zoo and Aquarium Association reminds us that “Zoos and aquariums have a duty to lead, support, and collaborate with education programmes that target changes in community behaviour toward better outcomes for conservation.” Ultimately, the number of ferret kits born at the Zoo matters only if our community feels a connection to those ferrets and cares about how their actions impact the futures of those ferrets in the wild. Conservation science and conservation education go hand in hand, and our Zoo is lucky to have great staff and volunteers leading our efforts on both fronts.

Do you know the next Jane Goodall or Wangari Maathai? Many kids are fascinated by wildlife and have a natural desire to help; our education programs build and strengthen those instincts. Our education programs are thoughtfully designed to allow kids to have fun as they grow up with the Zoo. From early experiences that focus on inspiring wonder to our more technical Conservation Science Night and Teen Career Conference events (join us in the new year!), Phoenix Zoo education programs can help translate curiosity into careers. Our programs cultivate empathy for all animals and meaningful connections to nature that inspire choices that support conservation outcomes no matter what paths program participants take later in life.

The Phoenix Zoo’s Camp Zoo, Night Camp, Winter Camp, Project Orangutan and many more programs all provide a window into the world of working with animals and for animals. Our Education team helps discover and build on those sparks of interest and shows kids where their passions can take them, empowering them to take action to make a positive difference for the natural world close to home and around the world.

Every program has a conservation element in the form of an ask, in which Zoo educators let participants know what they can do to help protect animals and habitats in the wild, from choosing native plants for healthy pollinators to considering wildlife-friendly choices when grocery shopping, among many others.

Many zoo staff recall childhood experiences in zoo camps or teen volunteering that inspired their careers in conservation. We’re proud to be part of these stories, as well as the many times we meet folks at the grocery store or post office who excitedly ask us about how the baby ferrets are doing or tell us about how a hearing a lion roar during Night Camp connected them with animals in a way that has stuck with them across the years. Our mission is to motivate people to care for the natural world, and these encounters show us that we’re making a difference one story at a time.

In mid-October, 30 black-footed ferrets from the Phoenix Zoo flew in an Arizona Game and Fish Department plane to the US Fish and Wildlife Service National Black-footed Ferret Conservation Center in Carr, Colorado. Some will stay at the national center to contribute to the managed breeding program there. Others will spend a month in pre-conditioning enclosures as a “dress rehearsal” for release to the wild. Those that demonstrate that they are suitable for release (hunting prairie dogs, living in natural burrow systems) will be sent to one of 20+ release sites across the prairie grasslands of North America. Thirteen of the kits born at the Phoenix Zoo this season are slated for release to the wild. Join us as we cheer them on! We’re so grateful to our agency partners, staff and volunteers for making this season such a success.

update from the Johnson Conservation Center:

I’m sure you can tell that [my son] is enjoying his time with you and learning about orangutan behavior and critically needed conservation efforts. I know it’s been an incredibly difficult year for zoos, and I hope that you continue offering fun, educational and engaging programs such as Orangutan Zoo Crew…. Keep up the good work. And, keep inspiring people to protect wildlife and their habitats while educating them that consumer choices have an impact.

What Can the Phoenix Zoo Do for You?

Though we are known for our animals, there is another species that flock to the Zoo - humans, or rather, consumers. The non-profit Phoenix Zoo welcomes nearly 1.4 million guests each year, making it one of the most visited attractions in the state of Arizona.

We can help position your brand through a menu of opportunities that offer exciting and unique avenues for your:

- Brand awareness
- Audience engagement
- Product promotion
- Cause marketing
- Community involvement goals
- Employee benefits

Offering a variety of integrated marketing opportunities including sponsorship of special events and guest experiences as well as onsite sampling, couponing and product display.

Corporate opportunities include:

- Sponsorship
- Membership
- Matching Gifts
- Ticket Discounts
- Corporate Events
- Zoom Animals

The Phoenix Zoo welcomes all forms of corporate support and recognizes that budgets as well as marketing and philanthropic objectives vary. As a result, we look forward to working with you on customizing an opportunity that meets your organization’s needs.

You can see them throughout the Zoo at any given event, leading a field trip or even just greeting guests. Wearing their iconic zebra striped vests, volunteers with the Phoenix Zoo Auxiliary have been supporting the Zoo for 60 years! Their origin story is as unique and colorful as the Zoo itself.

In the summer of 1961, a young husband and wife were enjoying a tropical vacation and discussing the future of the city they called home. The husband lamented that the city was rapidly becoming one of the most prominent in the United States, and yet it lacked some of the key amenities that would establish it as a truly “cosmopolitan force.” Knowing her husband enjoyed a good project, Nancy Maytag challenged her husband Robert Maytag (heir to the Maytag appliance fortune) to succeed where many had failed; establish a zoo for the city of Phoenix.

Maytag gathered his friends and associates and through influence and perseverance, he was able to put into motion a project that had long stalled as a city-funded entity. Thus, one of the most prominent privately funded zoos in North America was born. Recognizing that she and her friends could be a powerful asset in the development of the Zoo, Nancy Maytag asked her friends to assist her with “a little fundraising and being helpful wherever we’re needed.” That motto became the backbone of the Arizona Zoological Society Ladies Auxiliary in October 1961.

The first four members were Nancy Maytag, Mrs. James Allen, Mrs. Tim Rodgers and Ann Lee Harris (a successful Broadway and television actress). Their first project was the sale of Christmas cards netting $500. Next was a fashion show at the Camelback Inn that became an annual event well into the 1990s. Actress Ann Lee Harris used her influence to stage a world premiere for the movie, “Hatari” at the Kachina Theater on June 7, 1962. Many of the movers and shakers of the time attended the event and an appearance by the film’s star, John Wayne, created even more buzz.

In March 1963, the Auxiliary was growing in strength and numbers (125 by its second year) with an enviable waiting list for membership. It mounted the first Aid to the Zoo National Horse Show at the Arizona Biltmore with 220 exhibitors. Over 1,000 people attended the opening day and the five-day project netted $12,000. Over the years, the show became so prestigious that it moved to the Memorial Coliseum. Eventually, the Aid to Zoo Horse Show moved to the Goodyear Equestrian Center where it continued until 1992. After a glorious 29-year run, the Aid to Zoo Horse Show had earned over $2 million dollars for the Auxiliary and the Zoo.

Though the Aid to Zoo Horse Show was financially more successful, the Auxiliary’s Fall Fashion Show and Luncheon, first held in 1962, was a long-running staple of the fashion show season. It earned monies toward many projects until its final show in 1993. Other fundraisers spearheaded by the Auxiliary included Zoo-B-Que (an Arbor Day event), the Great Adventure Hunt (a timed scavenger hunt and dinner), Zoo Sounds (a concert and dinner) and the AZS Board of Directors.
Looking for a distinctive signature look to set Auxiliary members apart from guests at their ever-popular events, the membership adopted their distinctive zebra stripe uniform during the Aid to Zoo Horse Show in 1965. Though the uniform has taken many forms through the years (from wrap dresses to jumpers, skirts and the present-day vests), the zebra stripes have prevailed.

One of the Auxiliary’s most visible fundraisers has been the unique Handprints in Glass and Etched in Glass tiles located at the entrance to the Zoo. These beautiful tribute pieces have helped the Auxiliary raise close to $400,000 towards helping the Zoo build the new Doornbos Discovery Amphitheater and the Africa Trail expansion, as part of the Pride Campaign.

Auxiliary President, Kelley Durham, shares that “even before the Zoo opened, the Auxiliary was making it the group’s mission to raise funds for the Zoo and to promote education and conservation. Still going strong, this accomplished group of women do this by hard work, dedication and serving as ambassadors for the Zoo.” Over the past 60 years the Auxiliary donated over $3 million to the Zoo.

From its first days as a service organization, Auxiliary members have volunteered in many capacities. Whether it’s at the Zoo itself, helping with the dirty work of renovating Ruby’s House, donating gifts to needy families, hosting school groups of homeless children or fulfilling the Zoo’s Wish List, Auxiliary members have proudly embodied Nancy Maytag’s first description, “doing a little fundraising and being helpful wherever we’re needed.”

Mountain lion sisters Sierra and Mystic were rescued from South Dakota in 2007, after hunters shot and killed their mother. They were two of seven cubs orphaned that season. The South Dakota Game, Fish and Parks department determined that the cubs were unable to survive on their own, so they were sent to new homes. One factor the department takes into account is the cubs’ ability to feed themselves. Most mountain lions stay with their mother for two years, moving from a diet of milk to small game around three to six months of age. Though Sierra and Mystic were only a few months old at the time of their capture, they already had a confirmed kill. Despite this surprising accomplishment, they were deemed too small and inexperienced to remain alone in the wild.

So, the sisters arrived at the Phoenix Zoo just as the 2008 Superbowl was kicking off at the nearby Phoenix Stadium. In honor of this event, the public voted to name the two “Ely” and “Brady” after the famed footballers. But the keepers prefer Sierra and Mystic, respectively. Those names capture the grace with which the sisters bound onto the rock ledges in their exhibit, and how their kohl-lined eyes sparkle with interest when guests appear.

Keeper Danielle describes Sierra as “striking” with her more angular face and “outgoing” personality. She is the first to approach keepers and doesn’t hesitate to bat her sister away from toys and food she considers hers.

Though the two sisters will lay side by side and occasionally groom one another, they – like all siblings – will occasionally get into a bit of a tiff. “Whatever we give them, we have to give them two,” Danielle said, “otherwise they’ll fight over it.”

Right now, they particularly enjoy paper bags, especially grain bags from the hoofstock pens. “They absolutely love the bags. They shred them to pieces.” Keepers place the bags in different locations within the sisters’ exhibit, encouraging the cats to stalk their “prey.”

When they aren’t playing with their toys, the sisters like to doze on the rock ledge at the back of their habitat. “They take cat-napping very seriously,” Danielle said. In the wild, mountain lions are most active at dawn and dusk, when their main source of prey – deer – are out and about. A recent study found that mountain lion beds are usually “tucked underneath the low-lying boughs of a tree, or against the rugged face of an inaccessible cliff” to protect the cats from bears and wolves. Though Sierra and Mystic don’t have to worry about those threats, they are wary of humans. Danielle noted there has been some debate in the scientific community about whether mountain lions should be classified as “big cats” like African lions and

Sumatran tigers, or if they are just big “small cats,” like sand cats and cheetahs. “They seem like small cats in that they are wary, stubborn, and not as food motivated.”

If the sisters don’t want to perform their training for the day – like standing on their hind legs so keepers can inspect their front paws – they will simply ignore all offerings of food and engage in a “voluntary fast.” According to Danielle, “they also get uneasy if more than one zookeeper is present, because that means something’s up.”

Perhaps this is part of the mountain lion’s solitary nature. Excluding mothers with cubs, most mountain lions live alone, though their territories may overlap. Mountain lions have the largest range of any wild land animal in the Americas, spanning from the Yukon Territory in Canada to the Southern Andes. As a result, mountain lions live in a variety of habitats, from mountainous deserts to forests to open areas with little vegetation.

Despite being classified as “Least Concern” by the International Union for Conservation of Nature (IUCN), a few mountain lion populations are considered to be extinct. Notably, the Eastern cougar was declared extinct in 2018. This term refers to mountain lions (also known as cougars, panthers, or pumas) that dwelt east of the Mississippi River, excluding the Florida mountain lion population. Sources estimate that Eastern cougars were wiped out and pushed out by the end of the 1930s due to hunting and human settlement.

According to the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission, approximately 120-230 adult mountain lions remain in Florida. Any other sightings in the Eastern US are often found to be individuals that wandered from their western ranges. Officials still debate the efficacy and ethics of reintroducing mountain lions into the Eastern United States or breeding them with the existing Florida panther population. In 1995, Floridian officials sanctioned the breeding of Texas mountain lions with the dwindling population of Florida panthers, “preventing its demise” and “reinvigorating” the population to the numbers we see today.

Nevertheless, the Zoo is not involved in any mountain lion breeding efforts, and neither Sierra nor Mystic are likely to become mothers in this lifetime. But they will have each other and are in excellent health for their 13 years of age.

Be on the lookout for information on a new and improved habitat for these beautiful sisters!
