Dear Zoo Friends,

This issue of “Wild Times” features more photos of our amazing animals than ever before. You’ll also read a little bit about each photo, which is a fun way to gain some insight into our animals and volunteers, like photographer David Wagner.

People come to the Zoo for lots of different reasons. Of course, families with small children are a big portion of our daily visitors. But many adults come without children to learn about the animals, get in an invigorating daily walk or use their photographic skills to capture incredible images of animals from around the world. The Phoenix Zoo truly has something for everyone.

This spring we’ll still have our new Predator Passage under construction, so the north side of the Africa Trail will be closed, but there is plenty to see and do. If you haven’t visited Chutti the greater one-horned rhinoceros, he should definitely be on your must-see list. He’s quickly become a Zoo favorite, both with our guests and with our keepers. Our newest female baby giraffe will soon be out on the Savanna. We also have a new baby siamang, as well as an Arabian oryx calf and desert bighorn lamb.

If you’ve come to the Zoo in the spring before and had trouble finding a parking space, our newly-renovated parking lot should help remedy that. We’ve added 600 new spaces, 20 electric vehicle charging stations, new shade awnings and gorgeous trees.

So take advantage of our beautiful spring weather and plan a visit to the Phoenix Zoo! The heat of the summer will be here before you know it!

I hope to see you all at the Zoo!

Sincerely,

Norberto (Bert) J. Castro
President / CEO
Arizona Center for Nature Conservation / Phoenix Zoo
Without knowing it, you’ve probably seen one of David Wagner’s stunning photographs.

And there’s a good chance it was followed by a smile and, “Wow!”

His detailed, vibrant work is featured on our website, social media channels, advertising and throughout Zoo grounds.

Not only does Wagner have the “eye” to photograph even the most intricate and detailed animal scenes, he sees photography as a way to further the Zoo’s mission of inspiring people to care for the natural world.

In this special issue, Wagner takes us beyond several of his most popular photos and recounts the stories behind them.

I shot this while standing outside the petting area (there’s a corner of the yard you can access from just off the path). More often than not, these goats tend to be pretty relaxed, but they do like to play and interact with each other... especially in the morning! When they do, they’re a hoot to watch! I stumbled upon these two early one morning and they were already going at it – so I didn’t have to wait long for something to happen and got this shot!
If I had to pick one attraction where a photographer is almost guaranteed to get a good shot, it would be the prairie dogs (their next-door neighbors, the burrowing owls, are probably a close second). These little guys are always so active and the action changes constantly – sometimes to the point where it’s hard to decide where or on which one to focus! This shot actually ended up being one of my favorite photos. It wasn’t until I got home and started culling photos that I saw that cute facial expression and the tongue glistening in the sun that I realized this was my shot of the day!

The rhinoceros hornbills are fun, yet challenging to shoot; it usually requires some patience and perseverance to get a good shot because they tend to jump around and move erratically. I’ve even seen them take flight across the length of their habitat!

I think this was only the second time I had ever seen Chutti, and it was the first time I saw him in his pool. Most of his pool time was spent almost completely submerged, with less than half of his head above water, so I had to wait patiently until he rose up to get this “funny face” shot (only for him to submerge again shortly thereafter).
I always try and shoot MacLeod in the morning, as the rising sunlight really brings out the yellow and green colors of his skin more. And when the sunlight hits even part of his open mouth, it can make the reds and pinks inside really come through and almost glow. The hard part is getting an opportunity to see him with his mouth open... this shot was taken during one of only two times I've ever seen him do this.

Auggie is, in my opinion, one of the most photogenic animals at the Phoenix Zoo (Chutti is right there with him)! In the short time he's been here, Auggie has frequently "posed" for some magnificent portraits, yet I have taken many action shots that exhibit his personality and playfulness.

I had been shooting Auggie for some time from about 25-30 feet away, and then he suddenly disappeared around the corner out of view from me. Luckily, I didn't move from my position, because he soon appeared again from around the corner, only this time with a fish in his mouth. I thought it was funny the way he strutted across the yard - he seemed so happy and proud to be carrying that fish!

The pavilion behind the aviary is where I go when I just want to sit and relax. It's kind of out of the way and not very well marked, so I rarely see more than one other group of people. But it's the best location to view and photograph the buff-cheeked gibbons! I've never had much luck getting a good (i.e. in focus) "swinging gibbon" action shot. Due to the way camera autofocus works, the blonde female gibbon (China) is usually less challenging than the black male gibbon (Enik) when shooting against a bright background. But it's still challenging. On this day, no joke, I think just got lucky!
It can be difficult in Monkey Village to decide where to focus your attention (and camera) without missing the action somewhere else, as these monkeys are almost always on the move. I was tracking this monkey scurrying up a tree and across branches, staying partially covered by the leaves, when he appeared in a little clearing and dip on this tree branch. Right spot, perfect timing!

I’m almost embarrassed to admit this, but for the longest time I didn’t even realize that there were lemurs on those islands! Once I learned of their existence, I tried in vain to get some good shots. I got a few that were just “alright,” but nothing I was really happy with. But after many shots, I was happy to finally get this one!

Conservation Science Night
Families

Meet real conservation scientists and learn about the work we do to help save species in Arizona and around the world. This event is geared toward families with school age children, but there is something for everyone! Explore a variety of activity booths to try your hand at conservation science activities, including:

- Tackle engineering challenges to help save endangered species!
- Try your hand at tracking using telemetry!
- See if you have what it takes to graduate ferret bootcamp!
- Find out what you can do to help conservation!

This event is free, but advanced registration is required as space is limited.

Virtual Teen Career Conference
Ages 13 years and up

Through specially selected speaker panels, attendees will hear from experts in Zoology, Conservation, Animal Husbandry and Veterinary Care working both within the Zoo and in the field. The speakers will offer insights into their career paths and advice on breaking into their respective fields.
Representatives from the Zoo and other scientific and educational institutions from around the Valley will be on hand to offer information about their programs and opportunities for teens to begin working toward their careers right now. Volunteer opportunities, camps and other programs will also be highlighted.
Also included this year are two professional skill-building workshops designed to offer participants an opportunity to begin building skills that will benefit their professional knowledge and personal growth.
The event is free but pre-registration is required to receive the Zoom link.

It's usually easy to get a nice, sharp photo of these burrowing owls (I have many!), as they stay still for the most part, but it was the composition of this photo that appealed to me. I took this photo early in the morning while the sun was just beginning to peek through into their habitat. There were other owls in the front, closer to me that I was shooting. Then I noticed this one in the background emerging from her pipe, and I zoomed in and took the shot. You can see the sunlight just peeking through by her feet.

We hope the artwork you see in the Savanna Gallery and on the Zoo’s trails inspires both reflection and hope. As a conservation organization, the Zoo takes seriously its role as steward of each of the animals in our care. In addition, we strive to foster in others a commitment to save species from the fate of the passenger pigeon and the other animals featured in Todd McGrain’s Lost Bird Project.

The breathtaking works of artists Charles Thomas and Katherine Cudney (featured in the Savanna Gallery) complement the message of The Lost Bird Project (with sculptures found throughout the Zoo). Thomas’ landscapes pay tribute to the varied habitats that are vital to healthy wildlife populations. Cudney’s works highlight species brought back from the brink of extinction and the hope that their conservation success stories provide.
Phoenix Zoo scientists work with other biologists and land managers across the state and around the world to protect wildlife and wild places, from cactus ferruginous pygmy-owls in southern Arizona to Palawan peacock-pheasants in the Philippines. Extinction leaves a hole in the heart of everyone who cares deeply about animals. Sparking compassion and encouraging action to support wildlife conservation is our mission.

Next time you’re at the Zoo, when you look at the pieces in this gallery display, we invite you to think about the animals you see in your own neighborhood. As you notice the birds and other wildlife who share your habitat, we hope that you will be inspired to care about them and share your excitement with others. Choosing plants that provide food and shelter for native wildlife and avoiding pesticides, keeping cats indoors, and sharing your excitement for healthy bird populations with friends and family are just a few ways to take action for birds.

Thank you for your support for the Phoenix Zoo and our conservation initiatives. Visit our website to learn more about how you can help us continue this important work and to register for education programs that build excitement in the next generation of wildlife champions.
The Lost Bird Project will be on display throughout the Zoo until January 31, 2023, while the Savanna Gallery will feature Lost Birds and the Art of Conservation until May 30, 2022.

A wedding like no other...

Whether dreaming of a quaint ceremony or lavish affair, the Phoenix Zoo provides exotic charm and stunning scenic views. Offering more than 15 unique venues and wild touches only found at the Zoo — your forever starts here.

I have been fortunate to have taken many great shots of the jaguars, although by a wide margin, I have had much better luck and results with Caipora than Saban. This is mainly because Caipora tends to be more active and her habitat offers better photo opportunities (although on sunny days the fence can present a challenge). When she is active, I will usually stay and observe her for a while in hopes of getting something interesting … and on this particular day it paid off!
The Zoo’s initiative is to install a new, $3.2 million Big Cats of Arizona habitat, featuring mountain lions and jaguars. This 20,000 square foot installation will provide ample space for these intriguing native cats and facilitate guest viewing unlike current exhibits on the Arizona Trail. These animals are rarely seen in the wild, so providing viewing from different angles will improve visibility for guests. The exhibit space would also include educational messaging to explain the historical native ranges of the species and include a water feature for behavioral enrichment, which is the act of providing animals with mental and physical stimulation to increase natural and healthy behaviors. This project will contain a centralized multi-use holding building, allowing flexible use by keepers in providing animal care.

This past fall we were thrilled to report that the Zoo was awarded $768,000 from the Arizona Office of Tourism (AOT). The AOT grant program, entitled Visit Arizona Partnership, was rolled out to support productions that directly support jobs in the travel and hospitality sectors and increase Arizona tourism.

Planning, fundraising, design and approval process will begin this winter (a 12-month process), with an additional 12-month construction period. Contribute today and help us raise the additional funds of $2.4 million needed to make this project a reality. For further questions or to donate please contact Christopher Gutierrez at 602.914.4362 or cgutierrez@phoenixzoo.org.

We are excited to embark on the remaining key element of The Pride Campaign, designing an expanded Africa Trail. The expression “last but not least” clearly conveys how we feel about this portion of the Campaign.

Upon completion, the $7.3 million, six-acre expansion of the Africa Trail will be the Zoo’s largest Capital project to date. Guests will enjoy the new, one-acre African lion and spotted hyena habitat, as well as habitats for meerkats, warthogs and the endangered Amur leopards.

The architectural design of the new Africa Trail is in motion. Construction is already underway and the expansion is scheduled to be completed by the fall of 2022.

We invite you to Join the Journey, by making a gift and helping the Zoo during the final phase of fundraising for The Pride Campaign. Naming opportunities begin at $1,000.

For further questions, please contact Lorraine Frias, Senior Vice President of Institutional Advancement, at 602.914.4322 or lfrias@phoenixzoo.org.

On this particular day, I stayed and watched Auggie for a good 45 minutes as I had a great position to shoot from and he was only 30 feet away the entire time. He had this big branch he was playing with, when he suddenly just stopped and turned to look at me for about 15 - 20 seconds, which allowed me plenty of time to capture this handsome portrait – he gave me a great pose, don’t you think?!

Join the Antler Society - LEAVE A LEGACY

If you’ve ever wanted to express your appreciation for the Phoenix Zoo, a gift in your estate plan could be the perfect option for you. Whether you make a gift today or after your lifetime, you will help to provide experiences that inspire people and motivate them to care for the natural world. With a little planning today, your impact can be felt for generations to come.

The “Antler” name draws on an analogy between our thoughtful donors who have remembered the Phoenix Zoo in their will or estate plan and the deer that leave behind its antlers for the nourishment of other living creatures. Membership in this society is extended to those who share with us their intention to leave a legacy with the Phoenix Zoo.

These very special Antler Society gifts will fund conservation and education programs well into the future and ensure the financial sustainability of the Zoo for generations. Many habitats and programs at the Zoo have been developed through the generosity of Antler Society members.
