Dear Zoo Friends,

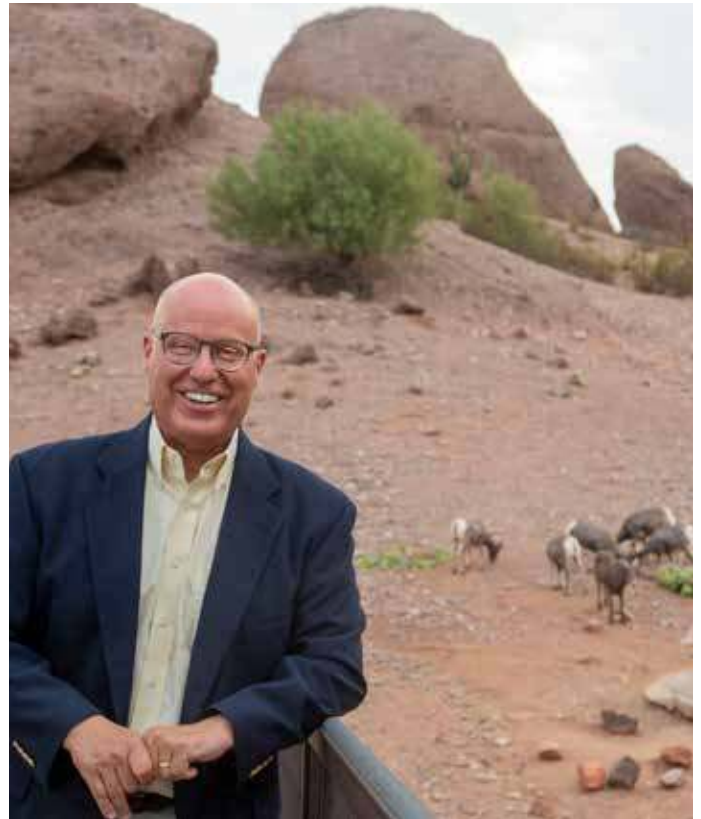

At the Phoenix Zoo, we're all about conservation and preventing the extinction of species... but this fall we're welcoming some extinct dinosaurs on their "comeback tour" of the Zoo!

We last had Dinosaurs in the Desert in 2017 and they were a huge hit with kids and adults alike. Over 400,000 visitors experienced our dinosaurs back then, so we're excited to bring this fun exhibit back to the Zoo at a time when we could all use a little bit of fun. This time around we'll have some new species like the Giganotosaurus, saber-toothed cat, sea scorpion and terror bird. The dinosaurs will be on exhibit throughout the Desert Lives Trail from October 1 - April 30, and will be free for Members and included with general admission.

There will be a self-guided tour where our visitors can expect to hear the roar of a Tyrannosaurus rex or the snarl of a saber-toothed cat, a fossil dig and educational information about each dinosaur.

On October 1 and 2, all Zoo members will have the exclusive opportunity to view a special sneak peek of Dinosaurs in the Desert, complete with lots of fun activities for the whole family. The weather will be cooling off by then and it will be a perfect time to visit.

I look forward to seeing you at the Zoo!

Sincerely,

Norberto (Bert) J. Castro

ARIZONA CENTER for NATURE CONSERVATION

We're celebrating several important births from multiple different species!

The Phoenix Zoo, Arizona Game and Fish Department, Tonto National Forest, and Fish and Wildlife Service staff participated in the August release of narrow-headed gartersnakes to the wild.

Excitingly, 24 of these little snakes were released in August in the Tonto National Forest - marking the largest-ever release of this species to the wild! Another five were transferred to an Arizona Game and Fish Department wetland facility in Pinetop and the rest are being overwintered at the Johnson Conservation Center for future release.

Narrow-headed Gartersnake

Over the course of the summer, the Phoenix Zoo welcomed 39 neonate narrow-headed gartersnakes across four new litters! This threatened native species is part of a breeding-for-release program at our Arthur L. and Elaine V. Johnson Conservation Center (Johnson Conservation Center) in partnership with Arizona Game and Fish Department and US Fish and Wildlife Service. Born live, each baby snake is thinner than a pencil and lighter than a sheet of paper.

Did you know the narrow-headed gartersnake is a fish-eating species typically found in and around clear, rocky, cool streams in parts of Arizona and southern New Mexico? The species was listed as threatened under the US Endangered Species Act in 2014. A major reason for the narrow-headed gartersnake's decline in the wild is the introduction and spread of predatory non-native species that prey upon the snakes and deplete the snakes' native prey.

Black-footed Ferrets

We were also ecstatic to announce the arrival of 21 endangered black-footed ferret kits at the Johnson Conservation Center. The kits make up five litters from moms Akoya, Roseanne, Canneles, Vermillion and Lady Mary.

"We are thrilled to have another successful black-footed ferret breeding season and excited for these little kits to grow up and contribute to the recovery of their species" says Dr. Tara Harris, Director of Conservation and Science at the Phoenix Zoo.

The Phoenix Zoo is one of six facilities worldwide breeding black-footed ferrets for release to the wild as part of the Association of Zoos and Aquariums' Black-Footed Ferret Species Survival Plan. Black-footed ferrets are considered one of North America's most endangered species. Once thought to be extinct in the wild, they have returned to their native habitat through reintroduction efforts. The Zoo has produced over 500 black-footed ferrets in its 30 years of involvement with the breeding program, with many released back into the wild in prairie grasslands in Arizona and other parts of their native range. In 2021, thirteen kits born at the Phoenix Zoo were reintroduced at sites in Colorado.

For the black-footed ferret kits born in 2022, most are nearing adult size after being raised by their mothers. In August, we were excited to announce the names - Maple, Acacia, Cedar, and Willow - chosen by the public for a litter of four females born to mom Canneles and dad Juniper. These kits and Akoya's kits recently headed to the National Black-footed Ferret Conservation Center in Colorado, for potential release to the wild. The other kits will remain in the breeding program.

Greater Flamingo

Our flock is growing! For the first time in Phoenix Zoo history, greater flamingo chicks hatched inside their habitat on the Africa Trail.

Greater flamingo chicks hatch with white/gray, downy feathers and straight bills; they won't get their iconic pink color and hook-shaped bills for several years.

Flamingo parents are team players, both helping to build the nest, which looks like a mini mud volcano, and incubate the egg. Once the greater flamingo chick hatches, both parents produce crop milk, which is filled with healthy proteins and fats, until the chick can eat on its own.

The chicks flock together in large groups called crèches and are looked after by a few adults. The parents will visit the crèche to feed their chick with crop milk. The chicks and their parents are able to recognize one another through their distinctive calls.

Follow along with the growth of the chicks on our blog at phoenixzoo.org.

Tiger Rattlesnakes

During the summer, we celebrated World Snake Day with the arrival of three tiger rattlesnakes!

Tiger rattlesnakes are found in the southwestern United States (including Arizona) and northwestern Mexico. They have a gray, lavender, blue-gray, pink or buff ground color pattern that turns to pink, pale orange or cream on the sides. This species of snake gets its name, tiger rattlesnake, from the many narrow dorsal crossbands, which create a pattern of vertical stripes when viewed from the side.

They are “live bearers” meaning they do not lay eggs, and usually have 2 - 6 offspring called neonates. While the neonates are born with a rattle button (a skin cap on the tip of their tail), they are unable to rattle until they shed at least one time. And, as they grow, they get a new rattle segment each time they shed (usually is about once per month).

Next time at your Zoo, be on the lookout for the tiger rattlesnakes! The adults can be found in the Arizona Aviary, and a youngster from last year’s offspring can be found on the Children’s Trail near the wallabies.

Roadrunner Chicks

Beep, beep! To keep the exciting news rolling, three roadrunner chicks hatched at the Zoo over the summer to an important recommended Greater Roadrunner Species Survival Plan (SSP) breeding pair.

Born to run, the greater roadrunner can outrun a human, kill a rattlesnake and thrive in the harsh landscapes of the desert southwest.

They have evolved a range of adaptations to deal with the extremes of desert living. These birds secrete a solution of highly concentrated salt through a gland just in front of each eye, which uses less water than excreting it through their kidneys or urinary tract.

Their diet is made of moisture-rich prey including mammals and reptiles. And, both chicks and adults flutter the un-feathered area beneath their chin to dissipate heat.

We're excited to help the greater roadrunner population grow... and you can watch the chicks grow here at the Zoo in the Arizona Aviary! The Phoenix Zoo is one of only a few other AZA-accredited facilities who have reproduced this species in the last year.
